Back in 1900 Emily purchased about 40 acres on Lake Michigan for $75. She paid for the land with the money she saved from making Bill give up smoking cigars. Of the six sons only Irving, Lee, Bill and Arthur had cottages on this property. Lee inherited the original cottage. Of the fifteen cottages currently on site 13 are historically related to the Vogelsang family and their friends. This particular historical works has been limited to a four generation spread which has been difficult enough to manage.

As told to Mary Kay Vogelsang by her paternal grandmother Lena Vogelsang in 1950, it all started when August Vogelsang and Louisa Behrhens were married in Minden, Germany in the early 1800s. They had a very happy life together and were blessed with one son, whom they named Diedrich. Louisa became very ill after Diedrich was born and two weeks later she died. While Diedrich, was still quite young,, his father married again and his second wife had one son.

August died soon after and the child Diedrich was given to his grand parents to bring up. He was later taken by his father's sister and her husband, whose name was Lempke, where he grew up and learned the harness trade. While still a young man, he came to America and on November 28, 1849, married Anna Clara Fuhs, whom he had met on the boat coming over. They had two children, William and Clara.

When the Civil War started Dierich and his family were living in Detroit, Michigan. He went to war on the northren side, saw much action and in the process lost one leg. He was taken prisoner and put into Anderson Prison by the Southern Army. He escaped and, after the war was over, returned to Detroit to be once again with his family.

Clara, his daughter, later married Otto Goetche and not much is known of them. Dietrich's only son, William, who was a wood carver by trade, married Emelie Steinmann. Their first son, Arthur, was born in Detroit in December of the year 1877. William Edward was born next in Saginaw, on March 12, 1879, soon to be followed by four more boys, Omar, Herbert, Lee, and Irving.
